

DOR'S MISTAKE

of a more serious character was a contemptible affair that occurred at the court of Vienna, and which was caused by their being two Counts Festeletz, one a Christian name of Paul. One of these is married to a noble lady, a friend and a favorite of the Empress and one of the ladies of the palace to Her Majesty, while the other lady is wedded to the divorced wife of a Viennese nobleman, and the name of the Count of course the birth and antecedents of this latter lady, now dead, were of a nature to debar her from access to the Imperial court and to entail upon her the society so exclusive as that of the officials of the Imperial household may be imagined when, one evening at a court ball given at her husband making her way into the throne-room, Dismay was apparent on the side of the Count. Her guests of the Emperor did not conceal their disgust at being brought into contact with so notorious a character as the ex-Madame Flischer. The matter was reported to the Sovereign, and he did not left the private prince to act, acting under his instructions, Prince Hohenlohe, the Count's Master of the Household, approached the throne-room, informed her arm and conducted her to the room, informed her as he did so that she was acting in accordance with the wishes of His Majesty. At the same time Count Hunyady, the Grand Master of the Ceremonies, took the plain that inasmuch as she was a noble woman, "Hoffbaie" by reason of her bourgeois origin, could not be permitted to remain. In the presence of the Count showed the card of invitation which he had received, which bore the names of the "Count and Countess," which bore the name of the Countess. It was pointed out to him then, what he ought to have known, namely, that it was in

EX-ATTACHE.

---

STOLE A CARLOAD OF SOLDIERS.

From The Chicago Tribune.

Officers of the Erie road indignantly deny that they would ever have been guilty of such a crime.

CHINESE VICTIMS OF CONSUMPTION.

He touched the waiter on the sleeve. "Excuse me, but—er—there's an insect in my salad." The Irishman did not even look at the dish. "Aw, niver mind that, sorr," he said, glancing over the young man's head. "It's the season for thim."

From The Indianapolis Journal.

"Says Mr. A. H. Hays, 'I ain't got to pay no $10 for this suit, it's second-hand.'"

"'Vat'?" shouted Mr. Achtemeier.

"I say it is second-hand. Second-hand clothes is them that's been wore once an' they's." An' I didn't have to wear the suit when I tried it on."

"'Vat a pity,'" said Mr. Achtemeier in admiration, "vats a pity it vus dat you vas brought up to be a farmer, an' not a pigness head dot vas s'polly owit of sight."

AN INTERNATIONAL L. COMPLICATION.

From The Chicago Record.

"Are your sympathies with the Chinese in this war?" asked his wife.

"Just look at that shirt front," said Mr. Simpson wisely, "and ask me a fool question like that again."

LEADERS OF JAPAN

STATESMEN AND SOLDIERS OF THE ORIENTAL EMPIRE.

MEN OF LARGE INTELLECT AND WARLIKE

EXPERIENCE WHO ARE ENGAGED IN THE

THE EMPEROR MUTSU-HITO.

ARISE, GAWA, TACHIBANA

ENOMOTO TAKEAKI.

Japan. FUKUZAWA YOUNKICHI.

While not a member of the present Cabinet, Yukuzawa Yookichi is an influential man and plays an important part in the affairs of his country. He is sixty years of age, familiar with the Chinese and English languages, and owner and Editor of the "Jiji," or "Tokio Times." He visited America in 1880, and his return carried the first Webster's "Unabridged Dictionary" exported to Japan. In 1885 he graduated as an author, and published a volume entitled "Western Habits," a collection of translations from foreign literature. This was the first work of the kind that had appeared in Japan, and it at once attained a wide popularity. Another celebrated work of his is known as "The Progress of Education."

GOTO-SHOJIRO,

INOUE KAORI<sup>1</sup>

OYAMA. INOUE.

In his next official place, that of Vice-Minister of

As a writer, he is singularly clear, and his state papers are models of directness and simplicity of style. Take, for illustration, a few phrases from one of his addresses:

ITO HIROBUMI.

Although he forty-four years of age, Count Itō Hirobumi has won the highest honors in the Empire, being the present Prime Minister and confidential adviser of the Emperor. He may be said to be the author of the present Constitution. He has written a large volume of commentaries on that instrument for the instruction of his people that would do honor to any statesman or scholar. No Japanese feels more warmly the influence of European thought and example upon his own country than he, and none did so much to allay hostile demonstrations against the Emperor as he. He has been thought by the masses that his presence would prove prejudicial to Imperial interests. At the age of thirty-eight years, he was next as a commissioner of the United States to investigate the coinage system of the Republic, and his report resulted in the establishment of the United States Mint. He was then the acting Minister of the Public Works Department, and while holding this position originated the building of the railroad between Tokyo and Yokohama, and the extension of the same to the Iwakura Embassy in 1871, and on their arrival at San Francisco on their way around the world he presented a speech that attracted a marked attention.

Itagaki Taisuke is another of the great men of every Japanese to uphold the honor of his country.

KARAYAMA SUKENORI

KABAYAMA.

in 1875, he was dispatched to the new seat of war.

166

calamity might depress his soldiers, he would not allow his intentions to be known; and when com-

He is a man of few words, but he is as brave.

KURODA, FIYOTAKA.

growth of the island of Yeosu. Waste lands have been brought under cultivation, roads and bridges conpracticed and towns and villages are rapidly springing into existence. It was now being imposed upon Japan by force through the Tōka Kaido at Kokura Bay, and, being chosen attributes of the Japanese nation, satisfaction could be obtained not only procured an apology from the Korean Government, but made a treaty that opened Korea to trade.

When the rebellion of 1876 occurred he was appointed to the command of a division acting against the enemy, and after the capture of the rebels' main battle, the rebels fled, leaving behind their arms, ammunition and stores. The fortress of Kanagatoku being closely invested, General Ōtsuki Hashiguchi raising the siege, and then marches upon the enemy and the castle of Shirogane, where the rebellion was crushed with the death of its chief upholder, the redoubtable Suigo. For this service he was promoted to the rank of Major-General of the Rising Sun. Subsequently he was appointed one of the Cabinet advisers.

OKUMA SHIGENOBU

Okuma Shigenobu, who is now the recognized head of the Progressivists, the second strongest party in Japan, is one of the prominent men of the Empire who have been identified with its recent growth. He was born in 1847 at Aomori, and was in the Department of Foreign Affairs; in 1880 he was made Secretary of Interior and Finance, and in 1870 he became a Sangi or Councillor of State, still having charge of the Finance Department. He

OTORI KEISUKE.

COUNT A. YAMAGATA.

the sobriquet of "The Von Moltke of Japan." He

Like Marshal Yamagata, Field Marshal Oyama

VISCOUNT ENOMOTO.                      COUNT SAIGO.

Restoration, Count Oyama received the appointment of lieutenant-general in the army, and was SAIGO TSUGUMICHI.

During the Satsuma revolt in 1877, the Japanese Government would not permit him to take up commander, with his staff, quietly spent a few days in New-York only a few weeks ago while en

_____

THE HORSE NEW THE DAY OF THE WEEK
 From The Lewiston Journal.

A Dexter man has a mare that knows several things, and among other accomplishments, apparently can tell the day of the week. On Sunday last the gentleman hitched up, and, having assisted his horse to get into the harness, he said to her, "What day is it?" For a moment in arranging the robe, and before he had taken up the reins the horse started off at a trot, and, as if she knew the answer was to add, "Monday," and, as the horse took that direction, he decided to let her go without guiding, to see what she would do. The route is altogether different from the one he had planned, and he left her to her reins hanging on the dasher, but nevertheless she carried as straight to the church as he would have done. When she had turned up to the church door, and the carriage was in position at the steps, she was stopped for her master to alight.